The disorder is common in the pedigree. The genotype is either homozygous (BB) or heterozygous (Bb). It affects one-half of the children. In the case of recessive genes: Neither of the parents may have the disorder. The disorder is rare in the pedigree. Both parents are either heterozygous or homozygous recessive. The disorder skips generations.

This is the feed after maternal milk which helps a pup develop both a healthy digestive system and an immune system. It contains colostrum which maximizes the weaning puppies' growth potential. Pedigree Starter foods include prebiotic fibre, which in both mother and weaning pups aids in the gentle digestion of milk.
